Crakenhall mill was reconditioned into a working watermill in 2010 and used for a BBC production called The Big Bread Experiment, broadcast in December 2011. The mill has a breast shot wheel which drives the stones to mill 100% stoneground wholemeal flour.

Flour produced at the mill is available on site and from local sales outlets. The mill itself is not open to visitors, but the flour produces is of a high standard and is well recommended for bread baking.
